

Methods of Working

Providing Techniques for Achieving Objectives More Easily

One day workshop for humanitarian and development workers

Wednesday 28th April 2010 9.00am - 5.00pm

InterHealth is delighted to host workshop leader Michael Stone

In the absence of correct methodology, precious time is often lost in achieving important objectives whilst working in high stress environments. With the practical techniques presented in this unique workshop, you will be able to work with greater speed, happiness and effect.

Who is this for?

This training is designed for humanitarian and development workers, particularly for those who are working in:

- Emergency environments
- Conflict or post-conflict areas
- The developing world.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the day, delegates will be able to apply key techniques in relation to:

- Distinguishing means from ends
- Improving Field Assessments
- Coping with different cultures
- Negotiation
- Effective co-ordination
- Chairing meetings
- Dealing with Head Offices
- What it is to be humanitarian.

This interactive workshop focuses on methods of working which will enable you to be more effective, and enhance your career. Above all, by implementing techniques provided, you will be able to improve your services to the most vulnerable.

Michael Stone

Michael Stone has substantial experience directing operations with NGOs, IFRC and the United Nations, usually in the most difficult circumstances. He has worked for a number of years in the conflict areas of Afghanistan, Pakistan, former Yugoslavia, Georgia and Iraq. In addition, he has chaired co-ordination bodies, and reviewed programmes around the world at policy level for IFRC, ICRC and the United Nations.
